

INVITATION

International Academic Youth Ministry conference:

“Youth as Agents of Change? – between community and diversity”

How is the church relevant for youth in all the changes that happen in their lives? Fridays For Future, green student movements and other movements remind us that adolescence is not only about personal physiological and mental changes, but about a life stage from which calls are sent to the world. Calls for change, calls for justice, calls for peace, calls for sustainability. What is a stake when we talk about youth and change in relation to church? This, we will explore further when we meet in Copenhagen.

Who will present? The presentations will be given by a wide range of researchers and longtime practitioners mainly from Europe. As a conference participant you will have a rich possibility to engage with the presenters.

Who can join? The conference is open for those who are engaged or interested in youth ministry research. While it is an academic conference both academics and practitioners are welcome whether you are a professor, student or active in one of the many youth organizations.

Why join the conference? Join if you want to know about the latest research in youth ministry. The conference will offer you inspiration, networking, and communal reflection over relevant topics in youth ministry.

Conference details: The conference will start Wednesday April 12th at 12:00 with lunch and registration. First paper will be at 13:00. The conference closes Saturday with lunch ending at 13:00. Friday program will be more adapted to practitioners. A more detailed program will be made available later at iasym.org/cph2023. You can join the whole conference or just a day.

This is an academic conference. Keynotes and research papers will be given a responder and a chair. Emerging papers will be given a chair, and the participants will act as responders. All presentations will engage with the participants.

The conference will be held at: University of Copenhagen, Faculty of Theology, Søndre Campus, Karen Blixens Vej 8, 2300 Copenhagen S, Denmark
